Dear Friends of Heywood Healthcare,

It is my pleasure to share this issue of A Healthy You with you and your family. Heywood Healthcare is spearheading many exciting healthcare changes in our region this year. Among the most important is Heywood’s enhanced focus on behavioral health and addiction treatment services. With the backing of state and federal legislators, we now have the additional support we need to grow behavioral health and addiction treatment services in our region.

This support not only enabled Heywood to expand its behavioral health partial hospitalization program in 2014, it has spurred us on to seek permitting to develop a property in Petersham, which would focus on outpatient, residential and inpatient behavioral health and addiction treatment services. This proposed facility will provide a local solution for the behavioral healthcare crisis and the disturbingly high suicide rate in the North Central/North Quabbin regions.

In addition, we continue to prepare to meet the Ebola Virus challenge through coordination with state and federal health officials, local health agencies and first responders. We are constantly updating our protocols as new information and recommendations become available to prepare and train our staff for their protection and that of our patients. In addition, our new Xenex disinfecting robot provides an additional layer of protection for our patients. Using ultraviolet light, it is able to eliminate the Ebola Virus and the Enterovirus D-68, as well as a host of other dangerous bacteria and viruses in just a few minutes.

As always, we are privileged to be entrusted with your healthcare needs. We look forward to providing you with enhanced services this year, including our new Heart and Vascular Center, scheduled to open this month.

If you have any questions or concerns, please feel free to contact my office at President@heywood.org.

Yours in Good Health,

Win Brown
President & CEO
Heywood Healthcare

The Health Policy Commission’s Community Hospital Acceleration Revitalization Transformation (CHART) grant program has made phased investment for certain Massachusetts community hospitals to enhance their delivery of efficient, effective care. The program focuses on care coordination, integration, and delivery transformations; advancement of electronic health records adoption and information exchange among providers; increasing alternative payment methods and accountable care organizations; and enhancing patient safety, access to behavioral health services, and coordination between hospitals and community-based providers and organizations.

CHART Phase 1 awarded Athol Hospital $484,128 and Heywood Hospital $315,000 to support strategic pilot initiatives aimed towards building a greater level of access to behavioral health services, and coordination between hospitals and community-based providers and organizations. Initiatives include school-based care coordination; improving Emergency Department care coordination; expanding the use of technology to support provider information exchange; conducting a regional behavioral health needs assessment to identify gaps in care; and the creation of the Regional Behavioral Health Collaborative to improve dialogue among clinical and community providers.

A $2,900,000 Phase 2 award will support further enhancement of primary care and behavioral health integration, growth within our school-based care coordination and Emergency Department navigator programs, implementation of tele-mental health services, enhancement of health information exchange technology, the creation of an online resource directory, and the development and expansion of inpatient and outpatient mental health, substance abuse disorder and detox services congruent with our behavioral health needs assessment findings.

“The work of our local legislators and the state funding they helped secure has already impacted over 100 students and 200 local families through in-school programs and other vital community outreach efforts,” stated Heywood Healthcare’s Vice President of External Affairs and Chief Philanthropy Officer Dawn Casavant.

CHART Grant funding is not the only added support that the hospitals have garnered. The Executive Office of Health and Human Services recently awarded the hospitals $847,000 to improve wireless infrastructure and implement a number of patient-centered care and process improvements.

Additionally, the Massachusetts Department of Public Health awarded $35,000 to support Heywood Hospital’s existing suicide prevention initiatives. Senator Stephen Brewer, a strong supporter of local health initiatives and founding member of the Montachusett Suicide Prevention Taskforce, noted that the funding offered the state, “a great opportunity to partner with hospitals that provide critical care to some of the neediest residents in the Commonwealth.”

In the fall of 2011, a community health study revealed that the suicide rate in the Gardner area was nearly double the state average.

“For about three years prior to that, we’d been feeling it without knowing the numbers,” said Barbara Nealon, LSW, Heywood Hospital’s director of social service and multicultural services.

In response, Heywood Hospital took the lead in establishing what is now the Montachusett Area Suicide Prevention Task Force, a coalition of 100-plus community, school, fire and police, elder service, faith-based and healthcare organizations, mental health providers, and the state Departments of Public Health (DPH) and Mental Health (DMH). The task force meets monthly, focusing on initiatives to reduce the incidence of suicide in this region. Nealon co-chairs the group with Heywood Director of Behavioral Health Nora Saluvardos, RN.

One of the group’s first undertakings was the Men’s Suicide Prevention Project. That’s because the study data revealed that Gardner’s annual suicide rate among men aged 25 to 64 was dramatically higher than any other age group (25.5 deaths per 100,000 of the population, while the state average was 12 per 100,000). Fitchburg’s suicide rate in this population was 13.1 and Leominster’s was 11.

“If you looked at a bar graph of this data, Gardner looked like a mountain peak in the midst of all other communities in North Central Massachusetts,” said Project Coordinator Michael Ellis.

“We realized we had to do something about why these men are considering suicide their only option,” he added. And in just over a year, the project has made inroads.

“We’ve created new messaging and marketing materials aimed specifically at guys,” Ellis said. He noted that many men are reluctant to ask for help with anything – but particularly if they’re having a mental health crisis.

“We’ve also provided training to man-centric organizations like corrections, law enforcement and veterans’ groups,” he continued. “And we’ve conducted staff training at unemployment offices where they might see men who’ve lost their jobs, so they can identify someone in crisis and offer immediate intervention and support.”

Additionally, the project launched a twice-monthly men’s support group in June, giving participants a safe, confidential place to talk. To date, men from age 28 to 80 from all walks of life have participated in the group.

“We’re trying to remove barriers and allow men to have that conversation,” Ellis said. “We want to remove the stigma, let them know that depression isn’t a character flaw but a real physiological condition, and there are options for treatment.”

The message is getting through. In a recent survey, participants were asked what they found most beneficial about the support group.

“It’s an opportunity to share with other men, in trust, about a hidden situation and know there are other men there to help and support you,” wrote one.

“The other guys understand you and where you’re coming from,” wrote another.

“I look forward to the first and third Wednesday of the month,” wrote a third.

“We all have a part to play in helping to prevent suicide,” Ellis said. “Be observant, watch for changes in friends’ or loved ones’ behavior, and don’t be afraid to act.”

Looking ahead, the task force has begun to expand its focus to suicide prevention in other demographic groups including adolescents, teens, and seniors.

“We want people to know they’re not alone,” Nealon added. “There are people here to support you, or find someone who can. Just because you’re feeling despair today, doesn’t mean you can’t feel hope for the future.”

Since Athol Hospital became part of Heywood Healthcare two years ago, there has been a steady stream of initiatives to enhance the care that this 25-bed critical access hospital provides to the community.

In what may be the most ambitious undertaking to date, plans are in the works to build a new Emergency Department (ED) – something that Chief Operating Officer Mike Grimmer characterizes as a “dire need.”

“We don’t have the capacity to meet all of our community’s needs,” he explained. “The current ED has only four exam rooms and eight bays with curtains, so there’s very limited privacy. The waiting room is quite small, and you have to go through the treatment area to get to it. And there’s a single entrance for both ambulance and walk-in patients.”

The design of the new ED addresses these issues – and more.

“We are planning for eight dedicated acute-care rooms and six behavioral health rooms, all private,” Grimmer said, which would more than double the capacity of the current ED.

“The design will include separate areas for behavioral health and acute treatment – the standard of care in emergency departments today. And we’ll have a bigger, better-located waiting room, and a separate entrance for patients who arrive by ambulance.”

Other features of the new facility include a negative pressure room (an isolation room with special ventilation that prevents contaminated air from escaping), and rooms equipped to treat specific types of patients (such as one with ear, nose and throat equipment).

“This improvement to the physical plant is fantastic for patients and providers,” said Steven Yerid, MD, Heywood Healthcare’s chief of emergency medicine. “By building a new facility, we will be able to incorporate features that every ED has on its wish list. And we’ll design the space for the most efficient workflow.”

If all goes according to plan, construction of the new energy-efficient and environmentally conscious ED could begin in 2015 and take 12 to 18 months to complete.

In addition, medical office space is proposed to be built above the new ED. “Having brand-new office space and a modern ED will be a big advantage in recruiting both primary care physicians and specialists to our community,” Grimmer noted.

So how is this major project being funded?

The state legislature has included the project in a $2 million capital facilities bond bill for costs associated with the new emergency department, explained Dawn Casavant, Heywood Healthcare’s vice president of external affairs and chief philanthropy officer.

“The Governor has signed off on it, and now we’re just waiting for the Secretary of Administration and Finance to do the same so the funds can be released,” she noted.

The hospital is also conducting a fundraising feasibility study to assess necessary community support, which will be completed in the next few months.

The hospital also has applied for and received several grants to improve access to, and care coordination of, behavioral health... services for adults and youth. These include a $484,000 CHART grant funded through the state Health Policy Commission; support for a pilot telemental health program (using telecommunications technology to provide behavioral health services in remote areas); and a federal grant to develop a cooperative program between Athol Hospital, the regional school district and Clinical and Support Options (CSO), a behavioral health provider.

“Grants, gifts and state allocations make the impossible possible,” Casavant said.
“We wouldn’t be able to fulfill many of these initiatives without this kind of support.”

“When Athol Hospital became part of Heywood Healthcare, I think there was some concern about the future of the hospital,” Dr. Yerid added. “As time goes by,
I think people appreciate that the hospital is truly changing for the better.”
Having a baby is a remarkable, life-changing event. Having a baby at Heywood Hospital’s LaChance Maternity Center makes the experience even more special with an array of spa-like services designed for your comfort and pleasure.

“Our main focus is to make patients comfortable and provide them with a ‘wow’ experience when they’re here,” said Director of Maternal/Child Health Karen Beaton, RNC, BSN, MS.

To that end, the Center not only offers traditional pain management options during labor (such as epidurals and intrathecals), but also hydrotherapy and free doula services. A doula is a woman who is specially trained to assist women through childbirth.

“We’re the only hospital in the area that offers doula services at no charge,” Beaton said. “This one-on-one support has been shown to decrease the length of labor and C-section rates, and to enhance the patient experience.”

In fact, Heywood Hospital has the second-lowest C-section rate in the state, an achievement for which she credits the doula program, the Center’s great nursing care and highly experienced physicians. When possible, the Center also offers women who’ve had C-sections in the past the opportunity to have a vaginal birth (an approach called VBAC, or vaginal birth after C-section).

Another LaChance Maternity Center service that’s unique for hospitals in this region is the availability of post-partum massage. For a nominal extra charge, new moms can get a 15-, 30-, 45- or 60-minute massage before they go home.

“After labor and delivery, a woman’s body is tired and sore, and a massage can make her feel more comfortable,” Beaton enthused, and added, “It is a great gift.”

Other thoughtful amenities that the Center provides include aromatherapy, spa-quality shampoos, lotions and soaps, room-service menus and music therapy (CD players and soothing music is available, or patients can bring their own music).

“Also, before patients go home, we serve a celebration meal – separate from our regular menu – to mom and her partner,” said Beaton. “It includes cloth linens, flowers on the table and a special dessert.”

To help spread the word about this close-to-home resource for moms-to-be, the Center held a “From Here to Maternity” event in September. It walked attendees through preparing for pregnancy, what to expect when you’re expecting, and the birth process itself. Staff also presented information on the services available at the Center, including the availability of lactation (breastfeeding) consultants. Beaton said she hopes to offer a similar event in late spring or early summer of 2015.

“This birthing center really does offer the best of both worlds,” said Jeffrey Blake, MD, one of the obstetrician-gynecologists from Heywood Healthcare’s Center for Women, and one of many respected physicians and family practitioners who deliver babies at the LaChance Maternity Center. “We have the comfort and warmth of a home-like setting, combined with the safety and security of a hospital. It’s a great place to welcome a baby into the world.”

Doulas enhance the comfort of our patients by providing continuous care for the laboring woman and her family. Other benefits include a shorter labor, reduced need for pain medication and a decrease in C-section rates. This free service is available to all patients who deliver at Heywood Hospital.

Amenities that the LaChance Maternity Center provides include aromatherapy, spa-quality shampoos, lotions and soaps, room-service menus and music therapy.
First it was enterovirus D68, a respiratory illness that affected children nationwide. Then came the Ebola virus, which claimed its first victim on American soil last October.

The media frenzy surrounding these diseases – especially Ebola – triggered a firestorm of fear and misunderstanding. Heywood Healthcare’s Director of Infection Prevention and Control Jeannie Sanborn, RN, MS, CIC, is here to help differentiate the reality from the hype.

“We’ve always had protocols to guard against contact, droplet and airborne transmission of infectious diseases, which provide us with the basis for more heightened needs,” said Sanborn. “For Ebola, we’ve had extra training, working with the Massachusetts Department of Public Health and the national Centers for Disease Control and an environmental organization specializing in hazardous biological waste management, to ensure that we have the latest, most effective protocols in place, for patient and staff safety.”

This training includes drills in which staff practice donning and doffing personal protection equipment, and the use of special isolation carts. Signs at every entrance remind hospital visitors to see a staff member immediately if they have a fever, have traveled to West Africa or have been in the company of someone who has. And in the Emergency Department (ED), ongoing training ensures that every staff member knows what to do in various scenarios.

“If an at-risk patient walks into the ED, calls us to ask what to do, or contacts emergency medical services (EMS) where first-responders go to someone’s house, we’re prepared,” Sanborn said.

“Collaboration, communication and education are so important right now, and that’s where our focus is,” she added.

“ANTIBIOTICS ONLY WORK AGAINST BACTERIAL INFECTIONS, NOT AGAINST VIRUSES, AN IMPORTANT CONSIDERATION DURING THE WINTER MONTHS WHEN VIRAL INFECTIONS PREDOMINATE BUT PATIENTS ARE OFTEN GIVEN ANTIBIOTICS INAPPROPRIATELY.” George Abraham, MD, MPH, FACP
“Everything changes so quickly, so our online resource provides the latest and best information,” Sanborn noted. “It’s important to keep people educated from a medical perspective – and not a media perspective.”

Neither Heywood Hospital nor Athol Hospital has seen any patients suspected of having Ebola. However, Sanborn said the hospitals are prepared if they do.

In most cases, Sanborn is more concerned with other more common “superbugs” like clostridium difficile (C-diff) and MRSA. These are bacteria that have become resistant to some antibiotics, making it more difficult to treat and cure them. Overuse of antibiotics has contributed to the problem.

To address this issue, Heywood has instituted an antibiotic stewardship program in which patients are carefully screened before being administered antibiotics, then given the simplest, most effective treatment possible – reserving the “heavy hitter drugs” for the most severe conditions.

The team involved in this initiative includes representatives from Heywood’s Pharmacy, ED, Hospitalists, Risk Management, Infection Prevention along with Infectious Disease Specialists Imola Daniel, MD, and George Abraham, MD, MPH, FACP, associate chief of medicine at St. Vincent Hospital in Worcester.

“Our approach to infectious disease is based on science, not science fiction,” Sanborn added. “We combat these illnesses with effective, proven precautions and care.”

Gardner Public Schools Backpack Program

“We are looking at a variety of means to ensure that our children are in a healthy state of wellbeing to support their learning process,” said Gardner Superintendent Denise Clemons, M.Ed. “62% of our school district population qualifies for free or reduced cost lunches and more than 11% of residents currently live below the federal poverty guideline.” However, when the school week is through, many of these students may experience food insecurity – not having access to enough food – over the weekend.

To address this need, Heywood Healthcare is launching a pilot backpack program in January that will send kids home with food to help sustain them on Saturday and Sunday. This cooperative program involves the Gardner Rotary Club, Gardner Public Schools and Gardner Community Action Committee.

“We’re starting with the school and grade with the greatest need,” explained Heywood Healthcare’s Vice President of External Affairs and Chief Philanthropy Officer Dawn Casavant, referring to the Helen Mae Sauter Elementary School’s third grade, where 67% of students receive free or reduced-cost lunches.

Students will receive a backpack on Friday filled with low-cost but nutritious foods and then return the empty pack on Monday. Heywood’s food service will order the food. The backpacks will be put together by volunteers.

“Enhancing our relationship with Heywood to initiate this program supports our efforts to ensure our students have a healthy meal over the weekend. It also helps to support their families and provide them with the ability to access care and wellness services in our schools,” said Clemons.

Heywood will pilot the program in 2015 to see how it is received and determine how it may be sustained. They will also be partnering with the Athol-Royalston Regional School District on a similar initiative.

When you give to Heywood Hospital, you’re contributing to the welfare of the community – and the benefit goes far beyond the walls of the hospital.

Project Leap

Project Leap is a Heywood-sponsored nutrition education program for Ashburnham kindergartners. Twice a week, the project coordinator Natalie Nelson and program volunteers give kids a healthy snack and a short lesson on healthful eating, using games and interactive teaching.

“The day I was there, kids were given five food cards and asked to put together nutritious meals,” Casavant recalled. “These little kids were awesome – they noticed if they were missing a starch or protein.”

Now in its second year, Project Leap has documented its effectiveness through surveys, and parents say they’re purchasing different, healthier foods for their families.

Off Our Rockers

Off Our Rockers is a joint venture between Heywood Hospital, Gardner Public Schools and Hannaford Supermarkets that combines afterschool physical activity, nutrition education and healthy snacks to encourage kids to make healthy choices. Aimed at helping to combat childhood obesity, this program is offered free of charge to students in grades 1-3 at Waterford Street and Holy Rosemary schools.

In addition, earlier this year Heywood launched an initiative in partnership with the Gardner Public Schools and Athol Royalston Regional School District to provide school-based care coordination, particularly for behavioral health.

School-based Care Coordination

“We’ve embedded school-based care coordinators who work with school staff to identify kids and families in need,” Casavant explained. “Our aim is to connect kids with onsite mental health counselors during the school day, and also connect their families with the community resources they may need, like food, fuel or clothing.”

Between Gardner and Athol, 94 students have received mental health services and 172 families have been connected to community-based resources.

Within one month of being fully staffed, the program had a waiting list, which underscores the very real need in our community.

“We have significant needs we’re trying to address,” Casavant added. “It takes a village to make an impact, and we can be most successful when we do these programs in partnership. That’s what it’s all about.”

The Hillis Conference Room and Community Meeting Center

Frederic W. Hillis was appointed administrator of Athol Hospital in 1960 and, during his 25-year tenure, oversaw significant expansion of the hospital’s services and physical plant.

Today, the hospital is undergoing yet another phase of expansion and enhancement of its services, and Mr. Hillis’ family thought it only fitting to make a gift to create much-needed conference space in his honor.

As a result of their generosity, Athol Hospital now has a large, modern boardroom equipped with the latest audio-visual electronics including flat-screen televisions and wireless video streaming capabilities, as well as new furniture. There also is a food station to accommodate events with meals, and adequate storage. A second, smaller conference room rounds out the space.

“These new conference spaces can be used by the hospital and the community,” noted COO Mike Grimmer, “and they are now open for business.”

For more information on the Hillis Boardroom contact Athol Hospital at 978-249-3511.
As a board-certified family physician, Katy Brodski-Quigley, MD, cares for patients of all ages.

“That’s partly why I chose family medicine,” she said. “I couldn’t pick just one patient population to care for, and with this specialty I didn’t have to.”

She admitted, however, that she loves taking care of kids.

“Most children are generally healthy, and they see the doctor when they have a physical every year,” she related. “It’s nice to interact with them, and it’s my opportunity to make sure that as they grow, medicine doesn’t seem scary or strange.”

Dr. Brodski-Quigley has found a way to interact with kids outside of her medical practice as well. She has written two children’s books that draw upon her diverse interests and talents.

“Evolution: A Path Without End” is a coloring book that describes the evolution of animals. “Lullaby” tells the story of the mommy, moon, sky, stars, doggy and deer who help a little boy fall asleep.

“I’ve always enjoyed reading and drawing, and took some art classes when I was a kid and in college,” she said, explaining the genesis of her book writing. “But there was no time in medical school, so I drifted away from it.”

“Once I finished [medical school], though, I had more time on my hands, and my own child was born,” she continued, referring to her now two-and-a-half-year-old son. “I started drawing and writing things for him, and came back to loving it. It was something I could share with a bigger audience.”

What inspires her?

“Inspiration is where you find it,” she replied. “There are so many beautiful things…nature, the love we share in our family, friendship, my work…you don’t have to travel outside your usual circle to find it.”

And she loves her work as a physician.

“It’s so nice to have the privilege of meeting many different people, making a connection and finding a way to relate to them,” Dr. Brodski-Quigley said. “I like finding ways to help each person make healthier choices.”

“These choices come easier for some than others,” she continued. “For some, changing their diet is easy; for others, it’s a struggle. The same with exercise or taking medicine.”

“But with some thought, compromise and creativity, there are ways to help everyone be as healthy as they can,” she added. “It’s just different for each person. And meeting my patients where they are is my specialty.”

This open-mindedness extends to Dr. Brodski-Quigley’s use of integrative medicine – combining traditional Western medicine and physical therapy with alternative approaches such as herbal medicine, acupuncture, massage therapy and chiropractic.

“I hear from patients a lot that they appreciate how we can work together to figure out the best way to help them,” she noted.
